RESONANCES

Objects, lives and stories of Liverpool

Many of the objects in the Resonances exhibition were used every day in the past.

Imagine you are living in 2061, 40 years in the future.

What are the objects in your home, that you would use to tell the story of growing up in 2021? Write or draw them below.

RESONANCES

Objects, lives and stories of Liverpool

Museum Curators write labels to describe objects for visitors. Your job is to create a label for one or more of the objects pictured below or something you saw in the exhibition.

You can do some research. If you cannot find the answer, you can write unknown, remember not all questions need to be answered. There is an example below

Choose an object from the photographs on the next page,

- Record the title of the item.
- The date.
- What was it made from?
- How was it used?
- Who owned it?

(Title) 45 RPM Record. Theme song from Skippy the Bush Kangaroo, television series.

(Date) 1968.

(Made from) Vinyl.

(How was it used) A vinyl record stores a copy of sound waves, cut into a spiral groove by a needle. When the record is played back, the phonograph (record player) reconverts the pattern into sound. The name "45" or "7-inch" is from the play speed, 45 rpm (revolutions per minute), and the standard diameter, 7 inches.

Skippy the Bush Kangaroo was composed by musician Eric Jupp was one of the most recognisable Australian television theme songs. The popular children's television series was about the adventures of a young boy and his pet kangaroo.

(Owned by) Unknown.

Ask your parents if you can listen to the soundtrack on YouTube, Skippy the Bush Kangaroo: Theme Song
